Prior to reaching the age of majority in my state (usually age 18), someone other than my biological or adoptive parent(s) was appointed as my legal guardian by a court of law in the state in which I was a resident at the time. Although my parents' rights may not have been permanently terminated, my legal guardian had custody of me, was responsible for raising me, and was appointed to make decisions about my life. Note: Legal guardianship does NOT pertain to divorced parents where one has legal custody of you.
